①

P. 71 the other knightly figure, in the second bay from the east of the south aisle of the choir, is undoubtedly that of Gilbert de Umfreville, who died in 1307. His costume is similar to that on the lustily described effigy, but the execution of the work is superior. He wears a suit of mail, which has a loose surcoat over it. His sword, with large pommel, hangs from a plain belt, and the shield is carried in relief, with a beautifully drawn cinquefoil, round which are eight crosses patonce (the arms of Umfreville). The slab on which the effigy lies is ornamented with the "ball flower," and small figures of animals supposed to allude to the Umfreville's office of exterminating the wolves and foxes in the valley of the river Rede.
